“[P]eople are overconfident in their ability to communicate sarcasm, seriousness, anger, and sadness over e-mail, and [one of our studies] implicated egocentrism as a probable source of this overconfidence.”
– Kruger et al. (2005)

“Speakers tended to overestimate their effectiveness and expected their addressees to understand their intentions more than was warranted.”
– Keysar and Henly (2002)
